SENTIMENT, n. A thought prompted by feeling; a direction or tendency of thought given by some passion or disposition of mind, as the sentiment of fear or of hope.—SYN. Opinion; feeling.—An opinion is an intellectual judgment in respect to every kind of truth. Feeling describes those affections of pleasure and pain which spring from the exercise of our sentient and emotional powers. Sentiment (particularly in the plural) lies between them, denoting settled opinions or principles in regard to subjects which interest the feelings strongly, and are presented more or less constantly in practical life. Hence it is more appropriate to speak of our religious sentiments than opinions, unless we mean to exclude all reference to our feelings.

SENTIMENTAL, a. Abounding in sentiment.—SYN. Romantic.—Sentimental usually describes an error or excess of the sensibilities; romantic, of the imagination. The votary of the former gives indulgence to his sensibilities for the mere luxury of their excitement; the votary of the latter allows his imagination to rove for the pleasure of creating scenes of ideal enjoyment, and gazing on the creations which he has made. One who is sentimental is apt to be laughed at; one who is romantic frequently falls into error.

- TASTE, n. The sense of tasting; the sense by which we perceive the relish of a thing; a correspondent sense of the beautiful; intellectual relish, as a taste for chemistry; a little piece tasted or eaten.—SYN. Sensibility; judgment.—Some consider taste as a mere sensibility, and others as a simple exercise of judgment; but a union of both is requisite to the existence of any thing which deserves the name. An original sense of the beautiful is as necessary to æsthetic judgments as a sense of right and wrong to the formation of just conclusions on moral subjects. But this "sense of the beautiful" is not an arbitrary principle. It is under the guidance of reason; it grows in delicacy and correctness with the progress of the individual and of society; it has its laws in the nature of man; and the development of these laws is the true "standard of taste."
- TASTER, n. One that tastes; a dram-cup.

Empirical, in this connection, refers to knowledge which is gained by the experience of actual phenomena, without reference to the principles or laws to which they are to be referred or by which they are to be explained. Transcendental has reference to those principles which are not derived from experience, and yet are absolutely necessary to make experience possible or useful. Such, in the better sense of the term is the transcendental philosophy, or transcendentalism. Each of these words has also been used in a bad sense. Empiricism, in this case, is applied to that limited view of knowledge which neglects the truths or principles above referred to and trusts to experience alone. Transcendentalism has been applied to the opposite extreme, which in its depreciation of experience, loses sight of the relation which phenomena sustain to principles. Hence, the term has been applied to a kind of investigation, or a use of language which is vague, obscure, fantastic, or extravagant.
- TRANS-CEND-ÉNTAL-ÍSM, n. The principles of the transcendental philosophy.
- TRANS-CEND-ÉNTAL-ÍST, n. One who believes in the transcendental philosophy. See TRANSCENDENTAL.

DÔVE, WOLF, BOOK, RÔLE, BULL; VY'GIOUS.—SAS K; ð AS J; SAS Z; CH AS SH; THIS.

as the usages of society; treatment of others:—SYN. Custom.—Custom is the frequent repetition of the same act either by one or many; usage implies practice which is so fully established as to have decisive authority: Hence we speak of usage (not custom) as the law of language.

USANCE (yû'zance), n. Use or proper employment; interest of money; time given for payment of bills of exchange.

USE (yûce), n. Act of handling or employing; employment; utility; practice; custom; interest.

USE (yûze), v. t. To apply to some valuable service; to consume; to render familiar.—SYN. To employ.—We use a thing when we derive from it some enjoyment or service; we employ it when we turn that service into a particular channel; we use words to express our general meaning; we employ certain technical terms in reference to a given subject.

USEFUL (yûce'-l), a. Producing or having power to produce good; profitable; serviceable.

USEFUL-LY, ad. With profit or advantage.

USEFUL-NESS, n. Conduciveness to some end, properly to a valuable end; profitableness; utility, which see.

USELESS, a. Having no use; unserviceable; answering no valuable purpose or not the end proposed.—SYN. Fruitless; ineffectual.—We speak of an attempt, &c., as useless when there are in it inherent difficulties which forbid the hope of success; as fruitless when it fails, not from any such difficulties, but from some unexpected hindrance or calamity arising to frustrate it. It is useless to attempt any thing without adequate means; and even when we do possess them, our efforts are often fruitless. Ineffectual nearly resembles fruitless, but implies a failure of a less hopeless character, as, "After several ineffectual efforts, I at last succeeded."

USELESS-LY, ad. Without profit or advantage.

USELESS-NESS, n. Unserviceableness; unfitness for any valuable purpose.

USER (yû'zer), n. One who uses or employs.

UTIL-I-TARI-AN-ISM, n. The doctrine that utility is the end of life and morals.

UTIL-I-TY, n. Production of good; profitableness to some valuable end.—SYN. Usefulness.—Usefulness is Saxon, and utility is Latin; and hence the former is used chiefly of things in the concrete, while the latter is employed more in a general and abstract sense. Thus we speak of the utility of an invention, and the usefulness of the thing invented; of the utility of an institution, and the usefulness of an individual. So "beauty and utility" (not usefulness) are brought into comparison. Still, the words are, in many cases, used interchangeably.

UTMOST, a. Being extreme; greatest; highest; n. the most that can be.

UTOPI-A, n. A term invented by Sir Thomas More, from the Greek outopos, no place, and applied to an imaginary isle which he represents as enjoying the greatest perfection in politics, laws, &c.; hence, a state of ideal perfection.

UX-ÛRI-OUS-NESS, n. Connubial dotage; foolish fondness for a wife.

V.

V is the twenty-second letter of our Alphabet, and is a labial articulation. It is nearly allied to F, being formed by the same organs of speech; but V is vocal, or flat, and F is aspirate, or sharp. V was formerly confounded with U, and hence the vowel sound of u and the consonant sound of v were both represented by the same character; of which confusion we have still evidence in the form and name W, which, although double v in shape, is yet called double u. The following line illustrates this practice:—

"For every purpose using reasons fit."

About the beginning of the 16th century, however, they began to be distinguished in printing; but still they may be found indiscriminately distributed in dictionaries. It was not till the beginning of the present century that the practice ceased in schools of teaching the tyro to say vowel u and vow u, as the distinguishing names of u and v. As a numeral, V represents five, either from its resemblance to the out-spread hand, or to the line drawn diagonally through four units in keeping a tally; with a line over it, thus v, it represents 5000. It has but one sound, as in the words vain, vote, village.

WIT, n. Formerly, mental ability; knowledge; hence, ingenuity in forming some novel combination of ideas, which produces a ludicrous effect; a person having this power.—SYN. Humour.—Wit (Saxon, witian, to know) formerly meant genius and now denotes the power of seizing on some thought or occurrence, and, by a sudden turn, presenting it under aspects wholly new and unexpected with a laughable keenness and force. "What I want," said a pompous orator, aiming at his antagonist, "is common sense." "Exactly!" was the whispered reply. The pleasure we find in wit arises from the ingenuity of the turn, the sudden surprise it brings, and the aptness of its application to the case, in the new and ludicrous relations thus flashed upon the view. Humour is a quality more congenial than wit to the British mind. It consists primarily in taking up the peculiarities of a humourist and drawing them out, as Addison did those of Sir Roger de Coverley, so that we enjoy a hearty good-natured laugh at the unconscious development he makes of his whims and oddities. From this original sense the term has been widened to embrace other sources of kindly mirth of the same general character.

X.

X, the twenty-fourth letter of the alphabet, is a double consonant, and may therefore be regarded as a contraction. Its sound is equivalent to hard c or k and s, as in fox; but sometimes to gs, as in example. As no English word begins with such a combination of consonants, so x is only found in the middle or end of our words. X, as a numeral, stands for ten, representing one V placed on the top of another V inverted; with a dash over it, thus X̄, it stands for ten thousand. It is initial in words that have been borrowed from the Greek, and has there the sound of Z.

KEY.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

REMARKS.

THE accented syllable of each word is carefully marked, and this to a great extent decides the sound of the vowels.

RULES FOR THE VOWELS.

ACCENTED SYLLABLES.*

1. If the accented syllable ends in a vowel, that vowel has always the long sound; as Ca'per (like pā'per), Ce'crops (like cē'dar), Di'do (like dī'et), Co'ra (like cō'lon), Cu'res (like dū'ty).
2. If the accented syllable ends in a consonant, its vowel has the short or shu. sound; as Cal'vus (like bā' Vance), Del'phi (like sēl'dom), Cin'na (like din'ner), Con'sul (like scō'ffer), Tus'cus (like mūs'ter).

UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

1. If the unaccented syllable ends in a consonant, its vowel has the regular short or shut sound (as in No. 2, above); as Bal'bus, Ac'o-ris, &c. But e in final es, is pronounced ē, as Ar-vo'les (like An'dēs).
2. If the unaccented syllable ends in a vowel, the following cases occur:—
A has the Italian sound (as in fā'ther); as Ga-bi'na (gah-bī'nah).
I has its long sound when it ends a final syllable, or precedes an accented syllable; as in I-n'i (pronounced i-u'i). But, in all other cases, i ending an unaccented syllable, is pronounced like e; as Fa'bi pronounced fa-be-i.
Y is pronounced as i would be in the same position.
Æ and æ are pronounced as e would be in the same position.

RULES FOR THE CONSONANTS.

1. C before e, i, y, æ and α is pronounced like s; as Ce'a, Cic'ero, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cæ'lia, &c. But c before a, o, and u, and also before consonants, has the sound of k; as Ca'to, Co'cles, Cum'æ, &c.
2. G before a, o, and u, and also before consonants other than g, has its hard sound (as in gave); as Ga'bi-i, Go'bar, Sa-gun'tum, &c. But G before e, i, y, æ, α, or another G followed by e, has its soft sound (like j); as Ge'lo, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger.
3. Ch has always the sound of k, as in Chi'os (ki'os), except when it precedes a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, when the ch is silent; as Chtho'ni-a, (Tho'ni-a).
4. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ti, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, change into sh and zh, as in English words; e. g., Pho'cion (fō'she-on), Ac'cius (āk'she-us). But when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant does not change into sh or zh, but preserves its pure sound; as Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T, in the termination tion, also retains its original sound; as Am-phic'ty-on.
5. S has in general the sharp sound of s as in this. When it has the sound of z, it is marked thus, z.
6. Initial X has the sound of Z; as Xan'the (Zan'the).
7. Initial PH before a mute is silent; as Phthi'a (thi'a). Initial p before s is silent; as Psy'che (sy'ke).
- Initial p before t is silent; as Ptol-e-mæ'us (tol-e-mæ'us).
8. Greek words sometimes begin with the uncombinable consonants mn, tm, &c.; as Mne-mos'y-ne, Tmo'lus, &c. In such cases the first consonant is mute, and the words are to be pronounced as if written Ne-mos'ye-ne, Mo'lus, &c.

N.B.—This vocabulary contains the words in Walker's Key, together with considerable additions from other writers.

* We have carefully abstained, throughout this Vocabulary, from marking the accented syllables, as in the Dictionary, with the longs and shorts [— ˘], as a guide to their sound in English pronunciation, because such a marking would, in numerous instances, have falsified the quantity. The long and short characters, when applied to Greek and Latin words, are universally understood as indicating the quantity not the sound, in those languages. To mark the following words thus, Ca'per, Cē'lix, Cō'ra, Cū'res, is to represent the first syllable as long in quantity, when it is, in fact, short; and in like manner Bās'sus, Cāl'pe, Cē'ssus, Hū'n'i, if thus marked, are held forth as having the penult short, when it is long in every instance. Many hundreds, if not thousands of words, would have their quantity thus falsified, if we applied our English mode of marking to the case of Greek and Latin words. The only safe way is to illustrate the sound in question by a corresponding one in English; but never to employ the long and short characters in connection with Latin and Greek words, except for their legitimate and established uses in prosody.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

REMARKS.

The pronunciation of Scripture Proper Names is governed chiefly by the rules which prevail in Greek and Latin.

VOWELS.

ACCENTED SYLLABLES.

When these end in a vowel, that vowel has always its long sound, as in Ca'des, Eso'ra, &c.; when in a consonant, the preceding vowel has the short sound, as in Bas'sa, Cor'ban, &c. But ah has the Italian sound, as in Tah'panes, &c.

UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

When these end in a consonant, their vowel has the short sound, as in Ba'bel, E'bel, E'lim, Blas'tus, &c. When they end in a vowel, the following cases occur: a final has a light Italian sound, as in Du'ra; s, i, and y have the sound of e lightly uttered, as in Dil'e-an, An'ti-och, Eu'ty-chus. But i, at the end of words, has its long sound, as in It'a-i. O and u have their long sound lightly uttered, as in Gol'go-tha, Josh'u-a; ai (diphthong) has the long sound of a, as in Ado'nai; ia following an accented vowel, has usually the sound of ya, as in Isa'iah (I-za'yah). But some in iah have the accent on the i in a separate syllable, as in Shem-a-iah.

CONSONANTS.

C has the sound of s before e, i, and y, as in Ce'phas, Cith'erus, Cyre'ne; of k before a, o, and u, and is marked thus: Ce e, as in Cain, Co're, Cu'shan.

CH has always the sound of k, as in Chaldea, Enoch, &c., and, therefore, does not need to have the c marked hard. Rachel has been anglicized, and this forms an exception.

G has its regular hard sound as in go, give, as in Gil'ead, &c. In Bethphage, and one two others, the g has taken the sound of j, by passing through the Greek.

S has its regular sharp sound, as in A'sa, except when marked thus Ss, when it has the sound of z, as in Isa'iah (Iza'yah).

N.B.—The pronunciation here given is that of Walker; but in a few instances that of Perry (marked P.), of Fulton and Knight (marked F. & K.), of Trollope (marked T.), of Carr (marked C.), and of Smart (marked S.), is subjoined in notes at the bottom of the page.

* Cai'nan.—P.

† Canaan.—This word has sometimes been pronounced in three syllables, with the accent on the second. But Milton, who has used it six times in Paradise Lost, has made it a dissyllable, with the accent on the first.

* The letter s has commonly the sound of z when it comes (in these circumstances) before a liquid, as in dismal, &c. Smart gives the s in Israelites the sound of z, and Worcester marks both words as pronounced with the sound of z.

THE PRONUNCIATION

OF

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES,

ACCORDING TO THE SYSTEM OF BALDWIN'S "UNIVERSAL PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER."

ELEMENTS OF THE PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTINENTAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

VOWELS.

1. In the continental languages of Europe, a never has its long English sound, as in the words fate, name, but usually the Italian sound as in far or father, sometimes approximating its short sound, as in fat.

2. E generally has a sound similar to a in fate, or else to e in met. In French, it is often silent.

3. I usually sounds as in the word marine, i.e. like long e; but it is not unfrequently short, as in pin.

4. O has nearly the same sound as in the English words no, not, and nor, except in Swedish, where it is pronounced like our oo.

5. U is pronounced in most languages like our oo; but in French and Dutch it has a sound intermediate between oo and long e, which can only be learned from an oral instructor.

6. Y is usually pronounced like i, that is, like our e. In Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish, it sounds like the French u; in Dutch it is like our long i.

DIPHTHONGS.

7. Aa in Danish or Norwegian, and ao in Swedish, sound like o.

8. The diphthong ae or ä is generally pronounced nearly like our a in fate or e in met. In Dutch ae resembles a in far.

9. Äi and ay are generally sounded like our long i. In French they are similar in sound to our a in jute or ay in day.

10. Au has generally the sound of the English öu, as in nöu, &c. In French au and eau are pronounced like long o.

11. Ei and ey are generally proper diphthongs, combining the sounds of a in fate and e in me, being similar to ay in day when this word is pronounced very full. In German they are like our long i; in French nearly like our a in fate.

12. Eu In French has a sound similar to u in our word fur, or like u in tub, but more prolonged; in German, eu and äu sound like oi in English.

13. The diphthong ie is usually pronounced like our ee, or e long.

14. Oe or ö occurs in several of the European languages, and is usually pronounced nearly like the French eu, or e in the English word her. Some idea of this sound might be formed by combining the sounds of short u and e (u in nut, and e in bet) thus üh, and allowing the voice to dwell a little on ü. Göthe might be pronounced güh'té-ah; but the u and e should rather form one long syllable than two short ones; the lips, at the same time, being a little protruded, nearly as in the pronunciation of oo.

15. Oi in French is usually sounded like wöh, or wä. Sometimes, however, it has the sound of ai, or nearly the sound of a in fate.

16. Ou in French is like our oo; in Dutch and Norwegian like öu, or ou in the English word our.

17. Ue or ü sounds like the French u.

CONSONANTS.

The consonants in the continental languages of Europe are generally similar in sound to the same letters in English. The following exceptions may be mentioned:—

18. B, at the end of a word in German, is pronounced like p; between two vowels in Spanish its sound is somewhat similar to v.

19. C, before a and i in Italian, is pronounced like ch in the English word chill; in the same position in Spanish, it sounds like the Spanish z, or like our th in this (except in the Catalan dialect, where it has the sound of s). In German, c before e, i, and y, is pronounced like the German z, or like ts in English. In Polish it has the same sound, even at the end of a word, thus, Prypec is pronounced príp'ets.

20. D, at the end of a word in German and Dutch, is pronounced like t. In Spanish and Danish, between two vowels or at the end of a word it has a sound similar to th in this.

21. In all the European languages g is hard before a, o, and u; in German, Danish, Norwegian, and Polish, it is hard in every situation, though it sometimes has a guttural sound. Before e and i (or y), in French, Portuguese, Spanish, and Swedish, it is like the j of these languages. In the same position in Italian, it sounds like our j or soft g. In Dutch it is always pronounced like h strongly aspirated. Gu before e and i, in French, Portuguese, and Spanish, sounds like g hard.

22. H, in French, Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese, is either never pronounced at all, or else is sounded so slightly that an English ear can scarcely perceive it. In the other languages of Europe it has the same sound as in English.

23. J, in Italian, German, Polish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and Dutch, is pronounced like our y. In French and Portuguese it has the sound of zh, or s in the English word pleasure. In Spanish it is equivalent to x, being similar in sound to a strongly-aspirated h.

24. M and n, at the end of a syllable in French and Portuguese, often have a nasal sound, similar to our ng. For example, bon in French is pronounced almost bong; alem or alen, in Portuguese, is sounded like â-leng'. In pronouncing the nasal m and n in French, care should be taken not to produce the ringing sound of the English termination ng.

25. Ñ in Spanish (like nh in Portuguese and gn in French and Italian) has the sound of ny; Miño and Minho are pronounced alike, meen'yo. (See 34.)

26. Qu, before e and i in Portuguese and Spanish, and before every vowel in French, has the sound of k.

27. R, in most European languages, is trilled more strongly than in English, particularly at the end of a word or syllable.

28. S, in many European tongues, when between two vowels, is very soft, having almost the sound of our z. In German it is often so pronounced at the beginning of a syllable. In Hungarian it sounds like our sh or the German sch.

29. W, in German and some other languages, is nearly similar to our v.

30. X in Spanish generally sounds like a strongly-aspirated h. (See 23.) In Portuguese it is pronounced like our sh.

31. Z, in German and Swedish, has the sound of ts; in Italian, z usually sounds like ds, zz like ts.

COMBINED CONSONANTS.

32. Ch in Spanish has the same sound as in the English word chill (except in the dialect of Catalonia, where it sounds like k). In Italian it is pronounced like k; in German, Polish, and some other languages, it has a guttural sound somewhat similar to a strongly-aspirated h. In French (except in the case of some words derived from the Greek) and in Portuguese, ch has the sound of our sh.

33. Gh in Italian is like our g hard.

34. Gn, in French and Italian (like ñ in Spanish) combines the sounds of n and y consonant. (See 25.)

35. Lh in Portuguese, and ll in Spanish, sound like our ly: e. g. velho is pronounced vel'yo; villa veel'ya; llano, lya'no.

36. Nh in Portuguese is pronounced like the Spanish ñ. (See 25 and 34.)

37. Sz, in Hungarian and German, is sounded like sharp s or ss.

38. Sch in German is pronounced like sh in English; in Dutch, however, sch has a sound similar to our sk.

39. Th, in all the continental European languages except Greek (in which the character θ has the same sound as our th), is pronounced like simple t.

REMARKS.

I, in French and some other languages, often has a sound intermediate between our ee and short i: vill might be pronounced in English vill or veel. O in on nasal should be pronounced like o in no or note, but not so long. In marking the pronunciation of foreign names, we have usually preferred to use â, e (as è) and ô, rather than â è i ô as the speaker would be in danger of prolonging the sounds of the latter too much. E (not marked with an accent) in French is usually silent; and it is occasionally so in Danish and German.

In pronouncing French words or names, the accent should be placed nearly equally on all the syllables, but the principal accent should usually fall on the last.

A double letter in foreign words is to be sounded more distinctly and fully than a single letter of the same kind.

EXPLANATION OF THE ABBREVIATIONS AND SIGNS USED TO INDICATE THE PRONUNCIATION, &c.

Arab.	Arabic.	Port.	Portuguese.
Dan.	Danish.	pron.	pronunciation.
Flem.	Flemish.	Russ.	Russian.
Fr.	French.	Sp.	Spanish.
Ger.	German.	Sw.	Swedish.
Hun.	Hungarian.	syn.	synonymous with.
Norw.	Norwegian.	Turk.	Turkish.

The vowels â, ê, î, ô, marked with a point underneath, have an obscure sound similar to short u: thus, Mertçn should be pronounced mûrtûn or mûrtûn.

â is employed to denote the long sound of â. â is broad, having a sound similar to o in not. ô has a sound similar to e in her (see 14);* it may be Anglicised by e.

û is like the French u (see 5),* which it is employed in pronunciation to represent; it may be Anglicised by the English u.

u, small capital, is intended to represent the sound of the French eu (see 12);* it should be pronounced like u in the English word fur.

u, small capital, is intended to represent a sound similar to th in this. (See 20.)*

e and k, small capitals, indicate the sound of the German ch, or one similar to it. (See 32.)*

n, small capital, has a sound somewhat similar to the preceding, but more resembling a strongly-aspirated h.

l (liquid) is to be pronounced like li in million; it blends the sound of l and y consonant.

m and x, small capitals, and sc, are used to represent the nasal sound in French, being similar in sound to ng. (See 24.)*

ñ is pronounced like ni in minion; it blends the sounds of n and y consonant. (See 25 and 34.)*

r, small capital, has the sound of rr in terror. (See 27.)*

w (small capital) has a sound similar to our v. y and ey, at the end of an unaccented syllable, sound like e in me.

ai and ay, are considered to be equivalent to a in fat.

au and aw have the sound of a in fall.

ë indicates a sound similar to i in the first syllable of spirit.

ôw is to be pronounced like ow in cow or owin hour.

gh is employed in pronunciation for g hard. ss is sometimes used to mark the sharp sound of s.

th is to be pronounced like th in this.

 The sounds of the figured vowels are explained at the bottom of the page.

* These figures refer to the elements of Pronunciation given above.

ADDITIONAL OBSERVATIONS

PROPER PRONUNCIATION OF FOREIGN NAMES.

1. EVERY letter or combination of letters occurring in the pronunciation of a word or name is to be pronounced with its proper English sound; e. g. ch is to be sounded as in chill, gas in get; &c. From not attending to this simple and obvious rule, many persons fail to pronounce names correctly, even while they have the pronunciation clearly and accurately marked before their eyes. Thus, we have given Che-wá'wá as the pronunciation of Chihuahua; many, however, with this pronunciation before them, have called it she-wá'wá, not considering that if such had been the true sound, we should have written it with sh. Chapala is in like manner most improperly pronounced shá-pá'lá. All persons desirous of speaking correctly, should carefully guard against this most vicious pronunciation.

In connection with this subject, it may be observed that, in names where the pronunciation is not repeated, ou and ow, if not otherwise marked, are to be sounded as in our and now; a vowel followed by a consonant ending the syllable, if not marked long, is to be pronounced short, &c.

2. In the pronunciation of foreign names, particular care should be taken not to allow á to fall into the third or broad sound of this vowel—an error to which English and American speakers are very prone; it would be far better, generally speaking, to pronounce it like a in fat. It may be observed, however, that a before a nasal in French is usually broad, almost like o in not. We have accordingly represented an nasal by ón or ôw.

3. In pronouncing French words containing an nasal, the speaker should be careful not to give o its short sound, since this is not only incorrect, but is liable to confound the word with others entirely different in spelling and signification. By this faulty pronunciation bon (good) is sounded like ban (ban or exile); bon should be pronounced bôn—almost bóng. Toulon should either be entirely Anglicised (as too'lon), or else pronounced too'lon—almost too'long. For the same reasons, eu in names not Anglicized should have its distinct sound, like our u in fur, and not be confounded with the French ou or u. There is no sufficient reason why the French names Dreux (drüh) and Droux (droo), Lewre (lur) and Lure (lür), should not be distinguished from each other in pronunciation, as well as our words grum and groom, cur and cure.

4. In the pronunciation of foreign names, the speaker should be careful to pronounce all vowels, whether in an accented or unaccented syllable, distinctly, if they are not expressly marked as obscure.

5. Y in the middle of a syllable, or at the end of an accented syllable, is like i; at the end of an unaccented syllable, like e.

6. When h (not small capital) occurs at the end of a syllable in the pronunciation of a name, it is not to be sounded. It is employed to enable the learner more readily to pronounce the preceding vowel short, as drüh, &c.

7. Äh is employed in this Vocabulary to denote a sound intermediate between ä and á, but more resembling the latter, as al-a-bah'mä, co-lo-rah'do. The speaker should be very careful not to pronounce the penultimate a in these names like that in far or father.

8. An acute accent (') is used to mark the primary accent of a name; a grave (') to mark the secondary accent: e. g. Pa's'sa-mä-quod'dy.

9. It is to be observed that the number of syllables in the names of this Vocabulary is to be determined by the accents or hyphens: thus, ice'lá-ben, the pronunciation of Eisleben, has three syllables, not four, the e in the first syllable (ice) being silent; dnies'ter, the Russian pronunciation of Dniester, must be pronounced not dni-es'ter but dñes'ter, the ny being employed to indicate the sound of the Spanish ñ, in other words, that of ni in minion.

10. An italic letter in the spelling of a name is silent: thus, Jes'samine is to be pronounced as if written Jes'samin.

11. The abbreviation syn. ("synonymous with") indicates that the name to which it is affixed is either simply another spelling of the name referred to, or that it designates the same place.

Different modes are sometimes made use of in order to indicate the same sound: thus, i long followed by a sharp may be represented by iss or ice,—we have, in the pronunciation of Eisleben, preferred using ice, as being simpler for the common reader. In a multitude of cases it obviously makes but little difference whether we select one or another of several modes: Trenton, for example, may be pronounced tren'tun, tren'ton, tren'ten, or tren't'n, the point being to show that the sound of o in the unaccented syllable is very short and indistinct—in fact almost silent.

* * THE reader may observe that, in this part of our work, we have not followed the method of marking the pronunciation adopted in the foregoing part of the Dictionary. The adoption of a different system of notation was necessary, in order, as far as possible, to represent all the variety of sounds in the different European languages; and, as we have freely used the materials of Baldwin's "Universal Pronouncing Gazetteer," so the system of marking the sounds of the letters that we have adopted, is essentially the same as that employed in that important work. It may also be remarked that the second or Italian sound of a (which occurs in the pronunciation of foreign names far more frequently than any other vowel sound) is represented in the Dictionary by ä. To this character there cannot be the slightest objection when we wish to mark the sounds of English words only. It is, however, far otherwise with regard to foreign names, in which this very character (ä) almost always has the sound of ä or é, and never that of ä.

APPENDIX.

LIST OF WORDS OF DOUBTFUL OR VARIOUS ORTHOGRAPHY.

The following Vocabulary comprises nearly all the English words with regard to which a diversity of orthography is now often met with.

The orthography in the left-hand column is deemed to be well authorized, and in most cases preferable; but with respect to the authority of that in the right-hand column, there is great diversity. In some cases it is nearly or quite as well authorized as that on the left hand, and in some it has but very feeble support. Both orthographies of some of the words are right, the words being differently spelt when used in different senses; as, draught or draft, subtle or subtile, abetter or abettor, canvass or canvas, calibre or caliber, caster or castor, controller or comptroller, &c.

THE PREPOSITION.

PREPOSITIONS show the relations between words, and are generally placed before nouns and pronouns in the objective case.

There are many nouns, adjectives, verbs, and participles, which are followed by their appropriate prepositions; and there are instances in which it is a matter of some difficulty to determine what preposition is most suitable to be used.

A LIST OF WORDS WITH THE PROPER PREPOSITION ANNEXED.

THE ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

AFTER having combined, in this Dictionary, the orthography, orthoepy, and definition of the principal words of the English language, as it exists at the present time, we shall now endeavour to give those who have not access to any of the elaborate works that have been produced on the subject, a brief account of the derivation and progress of that comprehensive and wide-spread tongue.

As the history of the earliest inhabitants of Britain must be deciphered from their stone weapons and implements, the circles of upright stones in which they met for council or religion, and the rude urns in which their ashes were collected and placed beneath the sepulchral cairn, it is not to be expected that we should be certain of their language, nor could such a people be supposed to have a native literature. The Phœnicians, however, traded with them long before the Roman invasion, and the British Islands were known to the ancient Greeks as the Cassiterides or Tin Islands. When Julius Cæsar landed on the shores of Britain, about fifty-five years before the Christian era, he was confronted by a bold and hardy race, who bravely contested every foot of ground that his veteran legions temporarily obtained. It is not the appearance, the manners, or the government of these bold Britons, however, with which we are now concerned; but we eagerly turn to any information we can obtain concerning their language or literature. It is to the commentaries of Cæsar that we are principally indebted for any information we possess on these points.

The earliest inhabitants of Britain appear to have belonged to that great family, whose main branches, known as Celts, spread themselves extensively over middle and western Europe. They were probably identical with the Cimmerians or Cimbri, who, on being expelled from the north of the Euxine found new settlements near the Baltic and the mouth of the Elbe. Pressed forward by the advancing wave of emigration, the Celts crossed from the neighbouring country of Gaul into Britain; and, at a later period, were driven into the inland parts of their own country by an invasion of Belgæ, a branch of the great Teutonic family. Their men of learning were their Druids, or priests, who did not commit their mysteries to writing, but communicated them to their disciples in verses, which they were occupied for many years in committing to memory; but at this early period Cæsar found them using the Greek characters in the record of other matters. During the time that the Romans held an insecure dominion in Britain, the Roman language would be used in administrative and probably in judicial proceedings; those who were of mixed blood, and natives advanced to any civil employment, must have become acquainted with the Roman language and laws; and, as the introduction of Christianity belongs to this period, this implies the more extensive employment of the Greek language, and thus we may perceive how some of those elements were introduced that contributed to the formation of the language of Britain. We shall therefore here present the Lord's Prayer in each of the languages that may have contributed most to the formation of the English:—

LATIN.

From the version made by St. Jerome in the latter part of the fourth century—the “Vulgate”—as edited by Tischendorf in his “Novum Testamentum Triglottum,” Leipsic, 1854.

Pater noster qui es in caelis,
sanctificetur nomen tuum,
adveniat regnum tuum,
fiat voluntas tua sicut in caelo et in terra,
panem nostrum supersubstantialem da nobis
hodie,
et dimitte nobis debita nostra sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris,
et ne inducas nos in temptationem,
sed libera nos a malo.

FRENCH.

From the Geneva version of 1588, as revised by David Martin, original edition, Amsterdam, 1707, fol.

Nôtre Père qui és aux cieus,
ton Nom soit sanctifié.
Ton Regne vienne.
Ta volonté soit faite en la terre comme au ciel.
Donne nous aujourd'hui nôtre pain quotidien
Et nous quitte nos dettes, comme nous quittons
aussi les dettes à nos débiteurs.
Et ne nous induis point en tentation,
mais délivre nous du Malin.
Car à toi est le regne, & la puissance, & la gloire à jamais, Amen.

GAELIC.

From the version of the New Testament by the Rev. James Stuart, as published by the Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge, Edinburgh, 1813, 12mo. (First printed in 1767.)

Ar n-Athair a ta air nèamh,
Gu naomhaibhear t'ainm.
Thigeadh do rìoghachd.
Deanar do thoil air an talamh, mar a nìthear air nèamh.
Tabhair dhuinn an diugh ar n-aran laitheil.
Agus maith dhuinn ar fiacha, amhuil mar a mhaithreas sinn d'ar luchd-fiach.
Agus na leig am buaireadh sinn,
ach saor sinn o ole:
Oiris leatsa an rìoghachd, agus an cumbachd agus a' ghlòir, gu sìorruidh. Amen.

IRISH.

From the version of Uilliam O. Domhnuill, or William Daniel, as published by the British and Foreign Bible Society, London, 1817, 8vo. (First printed in 1602.)

Ar Nathair atá ar neamb,
Naomhthar hainm.
Tigheadh do ríoghachd.
Deúntar do thoil ar an thalamh, mar do nithear
ar neamb.
Ar narán laéthamhail tabhair dbúinn a nín.
Agus maith dhúinn ar bhfiacha, mar mhaitimíne
dar bhféitheamhuibh féin.
Agus na léig sinn a ceathrúghadh,
achd saor inn ó ole:
Oir is leachd féin an ríoghachd, agus an chúm-hachd, agus an ghloir, go síorruighe, Amen.

Agricola, having done much in spite of pride and prejudice to civilize the Britons, conducted the Roman legions to the foot of the Grampians and had to encounter the Caledonians under Galgacus, where the battles, bloodshed, and desolation of the south, in the maintenance of independence, had to be repeated in the north. These powerful opponents seem to have descended from the same Celtic race, though they had probably reached the northern forests by a different route, and many were the encounters in which they bore themselves bravely in skirmishing with the Romans or breaking down the wall that their enemies had stretched from the North to the Clyde.

About the commencement of the fourth century, a new enemy approached the British coast; whilst the Goth was pouring his legions into Italy. The Roman soldiers were withdrawn from Britain to defend Rome; and, as the Britons had become to a great extent unaccustomed to war, they, in order to defend their country from the ravages of the Picts and Scots, now invited the Saxons to aid them in their defence.

This brings us to another era in the history of England, and introduces, not another element into the composition of her language, but the very nucleus around which all other ingredients were to cluster. "These Saxons," to use the language of their historian, "in the days of Ptolemy, just darkened the neck of the peninsula of Jutland and three inconsiderable islands in its neighbourhood. One of the obscure tribes, whom Providence selected and trained to form the nobler nations of France, Germany, and England, and who have accomplished their distinguished destiny." These Saxons, who soon lorded it over those whom they had come to aid, were a German or Gothic race, and spoke a language entirely different from that of the Celts, or ancient Britons, and were no doubt settled at an early period in Europe. After many conflicts, which it is the part of the historian to record, we have to note the amalgamation of the British and Saxon population; while a remnant of the Britons retired into Wales, and carried their ancient language along with them,—just as the Celts in Scotland retired before their Gothic invaders to their mountain fastnesses, where their descendants still speak the language of their forefathers, which is closely allied to the Welsh, the Irish, and the Manx.

The success of the first Saxon immigrants no doubt encouraged others of the same race to land on the shores of Britain, and secure for themselves "a local habitation." From a leading branch, called Angles, the country was called England, and the prevailing language became known as Anglo-Saxon, or simply Saxon. The Saxons cultivated literature, and Cædmon, Bede, and King Alfred are well known among their writers. Cædmon has been called the father of English song. Connected with the monks of Whitby, he appears to have acted as their herdsman. He was so little gifted with the power of song, that, when the harp was passed round at any convivial meeting, he shrunk from its approach, and retired to his own apartment. After retiring ashamed from such a meeting, he laid himself down and slept. In his sleep, some one desired him to sing something, to whom he replied that he could not. Upon the repetition of the demand, he asked what he should sing. "Sing me," said the voice in his dreaming ear, "the origin of things." He accordingly composed an ode on this subject, and still retained it in memory when he awoke. He was admitted into the monastery as a monk, and wrote numerous other poems on religious subjects—that on the Fall of Man bearing no small resemblance to some passages in Paradise Lost. His death occurred in the year 680. We subjoin a specimen of this poem, accompanied with a translation;—

Nu we sceolan herian
heofon-cyrcas weard,
metodes mihte,
and his mod-ge-thonc,
wera wuldor fæder!
swa he wundra ge-hwas,
ece dryhten,
oord onstealde.
He ærest ge-sceop

heofon to brófe,
halig sceppend!
tha middan-geard
mon-cynnes weard,
ece dryhten,
æfter teode,
færum foldan,
frea elmihtig!

Now we shall praise
the guardian of heaven,
the might of the creator,
and his counsel,
the glory-father of men!
how he of all wonders,
the eternal lord,
formed the beginning.
He first created
for the children of men
heaven as a roof,
the holy creator!
then the world
the guardian of mankind,
the eternal lord,
produced afterwards,
the earth for men,
the almighty master!

It will be observed that these lines are neither distinguished by an exact number of syllables in their construction nor by rhyme in their termination. The lines, however, are nearly of equal length, and a peculiar alliteration may be observed in their composition; for in every couplet, as may be readily noticed in the last of the above quotation, two principal words in the one line begin with the same letter, which is repeated in the first principal word in the second. It is remarkable how early this practice began, which forces itself on our notice as still more extensively employed by subsequent writers, who used the same letter at the beginning of every word in lines of considerable length, as, "They waightit at the wight wine and wared out words."

In Spenser, long after rhyme had been introduced, we find it in a somewhat more refined form, as when alliteration occurs in pairs of words in the same line; thus,

"The lily, lady of the flowery field;"

or,

"Nor timely tides did drive out of their sluggish source;"

or when the same letter is initial in several words, as,

"That art thus fowly fled from famous enemy,"

which readily suggests a line, which proves that this ornament of the earliest Saxon poem is not rejected in the highest poetry of the present day; for Childe Harold, describing the death of the Duke of Brunswick, says that he sat

"Within a window'd niche of that high hall,"

and, having caught the sound of the cannon's opening roar,

"He rushed into the field, and, foremost fighting, fell."

We shall here present versions of the Lord's Prayer in three collateral languages, that the student may compare them with the Anglo-Saxon:—

GOTHIC. (Fourth century.)

From the edition of Ulfilas by Gabelentz and Loebe, Leipsic, 1836—1846, 4to.

DANISH.

From the Danish Bible published by the British and Foreign Bible Society, London, 1855, 8vo.

Vor Fader, du som er i Himmelen!
 Helliget vorde dit Navn;
 Komme dit Rige;
 Skee din Villie, som i Himmelen, saa og paa Jorden;
 Giv os i Dag vort daglige Brød;
 Og forlad os vor Skyld, saa som vi forlade vore Skyldnere;
 Og leed os ikke ind i Fristelse,
 men frie os fra det Onde;
 Thi dit er Riget, og Kraften, og Herligheden i Evighed, Amen.

GERMAN.

From Luther's version, as edited by Tischendorf in his "Novum Testamentum Triglossum," Leipsic, 1854. The orthography is modernized. Luther's translation of the New Testament was first published, anonymously, in 1522.

Unser Vater in dem Himmel.
 Dein Name werde geheiligt.
 Dein Reich komme
 Dein Wille geschehe auf Erden wie im Himmel.
 Unser täglich Brot gib uns heute.
 Und vergib uns unsere Schulden, wie wir unsern Schuldigern vergeben.
 Und führe uns nicht in Versuchung,
 sondern erlöse uns von dem Uebel
 Denn dein ist das Reich und die Kraft und die Herrlichkeit in Ewigkeit, Amen.

ANGLO-SAXON.

From Thorpe's edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels, London, 1812, 12mo.

Passing over some names of inferior note, we come to that of BEDE, who is usually denominated the Venerable. He spent his studious life in the monastery of Wearmouth, where he died in 735. His principal works consist of scriptural translations, biographies, and an ecclesiastical history of the Anglo-Saxons. The next name that arrests our attention is that of ALFRED, which brings us to the beginning of the tenth century. He is well known to every reader of history for his successful struggles against the Danish invaders, as an enlightened law-giver, and as he who first gave England a navy that enabled her to assert that superiority on the deep which she has ever since successfully maintained. He claims our notice, however, as a promoter of learning, and cultivator of literature. His literary labours consist chiefly, if not exclusively, of translations of historical and philosophical works, together with the Psalms of David, into the vulgar tongue, in order that his subjects might be profited by their perusal. CANUTE, whose demise occurred in 1036, was author of a ballad long popular in England; and a few others, among whom some ecclesiastics are conspicuous, bring down the Anglo-Saxon literature to the time of the Conquest, which thus extends over a space of five hundred years, and in which a fresh interest has of late been manifested by the publication of Dictionaries of the language, and specimens of its literature.

We have thus seen the Briton superseded by the Saxon, and now the Saxon is about to give way to the Norman.

William, Duke of Normandy, known in English history as the Conqueror, cloaked his ambition to reign in Britain by an accusation of sacrilege against Harold, and came armed with a bull of excommunication against the Saxon king and his adherents, and a banner consecrated by the head of the church to shed the blood of Christians! Victory, after a noble contest on the part of the English, declared in favour of the Normans, and ultimately England was in their hands. The victory of Hastings was gained on the 14th October, 1066. The conquest introduced a change of language and literature; for a writer about the middle of the fourteenth century informs us that children were taught to speak French from their cradle, and that even the rustic aped the gentleman by endeavouring to speak French, and thus it is probable that the Normans diffused their tongue to a considerable extent throughout the land. The Saxon language, however, was not conquered, but in the course of the twelfth century it underwent great grammatical changes. The inflectional terminations of nouns, and apparently arbitrary distinctions of genders were abolished; the words were thus shortened, and their sounds must consequently have been altered; and hence may be dated the commencement of the language that is now known as English. Before the conquest, the troubadours had arisen in France, and exercised their poetical talents in the composition of romantic poems; and a Norman poet, named Taillefer, advanced before the army, chanting the ballad of Charlemagne and Roland, and was permitted to strike the first blow on the field of Hastings. WACE, a native of Jersey, about 1160 composed a narrative poem, called Le Brut d'Angleterre (Brutus of England), a work which is worthy of notice, both on account of its embodying the traditional literature that had been wafted down from the days of the Celts, and the tinge it imparted to the works of subsequent authors; for Spenser and Shakespeare were indebted to it, Drayton has reproduced not a little of it, and allusions to it may be found even in the poetry of Milton.

But we are now approaching an important era in English literature; for, according to Dr. Johnson, the Saxon, about 1154, "began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may plainly be discovered." About 1180, LAYAMON produced a translation, in English verse, of the Brut d'Angleterre, to which we have already referred; a few lines will show the approximation of the language of that day to that of the present.

He nom the Englisce boc
 Tha makede Seint Beda;
 An other he nom on Latin,
 Tha makede Seinte Albin,
 And the feire Austin,

That is, literally:—

He took the English book
 That Saint Bede made;
 Another he took in Latin,
 That Saint Albin made,
 And the fair Austin,
 That baptism brought hither in.
 The third book he took,
 [And] laid there in midst,
 That made a French clerk,
 Wace was [he] called,
 That well could write,
 And he it gave to the noble
 Eleanor, that was Henry's queen,
 The high king's.
 Layamon laid [before him] these books,
 And the leaves turned.
 He them lovingly beheld;
 Merciful to him be [the] Lord.
 Feather (pen) he took with fingers,
 And wrote on book-skin,
 And the true words
 Set together,
 And the three books
 Compressed into one.

About the end of the thirteenth century, we meet with a series of writers that may be called the RHYMING CHRONICLERS. Among these we meet with ROBERT of Gloucester, the language of whose Chronicle may be judged of from the following specimen:—

"Thus come lo! Engelonde into Normannes honde,
 And the Normans ne couthe speke tho bote her
 owe speche,
 And speke French as dude atom, and here children
 dude al so teche,
 So that heyman of thys lond, that of her blod come,
 Holdeth alle thulke speche that hii of hem nome.
 Ver bote a man couthe French, me tolth of hym
 well lute:
 Ac lowe men holdeth to Englyss and to her kunde
 speche yute.
 Ich wene there be ne man in world contreyes none
 That ne holdeth to her kunde speche, but Eng-lond one.
 Ac wel me wot vor to conne bothe wel yt ys,
 Vor the more that a man con the more worth he ys."

The next is ROBERT MANNING, who flourished in the latter part of the reign of Edward I., and through that of Edward II. He translated a French Chronicle of England, written by Peter de Langtoft, who was a contemporary of his own. The following specimen is given in modern spelling:—

The Interview of Vortigern with Rowen, the Beautiful Daughter of Hengist.

Hengist that day did his might,
 That all were glad, king and knight,
 And as they were best in glading,
 And well cup-shotten, knight and king,
 Of chamber Rowenen so gent,
 Before the king in hall she went.

A cup with wine she had in hand,
 And her attire was well farand.
 Before the king on knee set,
 And in her language she him gret.
 "Laverd king, wassail!" said she.
 The king asked, What should be.
 On that language the king ne couth.
 A knight her language leird in youth,
 Breght hight that knight, born Breton,
 That leird the language of Saxon.
 This Breght was the latimer,
 What she said told Vortiger.
 "Sir," Breght said, "Rowen you greets,
 And king calls and lord you leets.
 This is their custom and their gest,
 When they are at the ale or feast,
 Ilk man that loves where him think,
 Shall say, Wassail! and to him drink.
 He that bids shall say, Wassail!
 The tother shall say again, Drinkhail!
 That says Wassail drinks of the cup,
 Kissing his fellow he gives it up.
 Drinkhail he says, and drinks thereof,
 Kissing him in bourd and skof."
 The king said, as the knight gan ken,
 "Drinkhail," smiling on Rowenen.
 Rowen drank as her list,
 And gave the king, syne him kissed.
 There was the first wassail in dede,
 And that first of fame gaed.
 Of that wassail men told great tale,
 And wassail when they are at ale,
 And drinkhail to them that drank,
 Thus was wassail ta'en to thank.
 Fell sithes that maiden ying
 Wassailed and kissed the king.
 Of body she was right avenant,
 Of fair colour with sweet semblant.
 Her attire full well it seemed,
 Mervelik the king she queened.
 Of our measure was he glad,
 For of that maiden he wax all mad.
 Drunkenness the fiend wrought,
 Of that paen was all his thought.
 A mischance that time him led,
 He asked that paen for to wed.
 Hengist would not draw o lite,
 Bot granted him all so tite.
 And Hors his brother consented soon,
 Her friends said, it were to done.
 They asked the king to give her Kent,
 In dowery to take of rent.
 Upon that maiden his heart was cast;
 That they asked the king made fast.
 I wene the king took her that day,
 And wedded her on paen's lay.

'Putting aside,' says Professor Craik, "the authors of some of the best of the early metrical romances, whose names are generally or universally unknown, perhaps the earliest writer of English verse, subsequent to the Conquest, who deserves the name of a poet, is LAWRENCE MINOR, who lived and wrote about the middle of the fourteenth century, and of the reign of Edward III." His poems are in celebration of the battles and victories of that king. The following specimen, in modernized spelling, is taken from that on Edward's first expedition to France:—

Sir Philip the Valays
 Wit his men in the days
 To battle had he thought:
 He bade his men them purvey
 Withouten langer delay;
 But he ne held it nought.

He brought folk full great won,
 Aye seven agains one,
 That full well weaponed were,
 Bot soon when he heard ascry
 That king Edward was near thereby,
 Then durst he nought come near.

In that morning fell a mist,
And when our Englishmen it wist,
It changed all their cheer;
Our king unto God made his boon,
And God sent him good comfort soon;
The weader wex full clear.

Our king and his men held the field
Stalworthly with spear and shield,
And thought to win his right:
With lordes and with knights keen,
And other doughty men bydeen
That war full frek to fight.

When Sir Philip of France heard tell
That king Edward in field wald dwell,
Then gained him no glee:
He traisted of no better boot,
Bot both on horse and on foot,
He hasted him to flee.

It seemed he was feared for strokes
When he did fell his greates oaks
About his pavilion;
Abated was then all his pride,
For langer there durst he nought bide;
His boast was brought all down.

There is a poetical work of the middle of the fourteenth century that is so often referred to in general literature, that we cannot pass it over in silence. This is the Vision of Piers Ploughman, the author of which is commonly called Robert Langland, but of whom scarcely any thing is known. It is an allegory, on the impediments and temptations that lie in the way of the Pilgrim, and is remarkable for its attacks on the corruptions of the church, and on the indolence and ignorance of the ecclesiastical order. In its structure, regard is had not to the absolute number of syllables in a line, but to the number of accented syllables, while alliteration is still prevalent in its composition—arising partly from custom, and partly from established poetical phraseology. The following extract is taken from the first Passus, or division:—

* * * * *

I found there freres,
All the four orders,
Preaching the people
For profit of hem selve
Glosed the gospel
As hem good liked;
For covetise of copes
Construed it as they would.
Many of these master freres
Now clothen hem at liking,
For hir money and hir merchandize
Marchen togeders.
For sith charity hath been chapman
And chief to shrive lords,
Many ferlies han fallen
In a few years;
But holy church and hi
Hold better togeders,
The most mischief on mould
Is mounting well fast.
There preached a pardoner,
As he a priest were;
Brought forth a bul
With many bishops' seals,
And said that himself might
Assolien hem all,
Of falsehede of fasting,
Of avowes y-broken.
Lewed men leved it well,
And liked his words;
Comen up kneeling
To kissen his bulls:
He bouched hem with his brevet,
And beared hir eyen,
And raught with his ragman
Kinges and brooches.

This remarkable poem brings us now to the threshold of our living literature; for, although the poem of Langland might be read with interest, yet it would be more on account of its language with one set of readers and of its subject with another, than for gratification in its poetical grace.

CHAUCER, therefore, is still our first great poet—the Homer of English poetry. He is supposed to have been born in 1323, and so may have been contemporary with Langland. The works of Chaucer are voluminous, occupying no fewer than eight volumes of Bell's edition of the English Poets. The best known and most carefully edited of his numerous works, are his Canterbury Tales—although, as we have seen, he was not the first poet who introduced the ornament of rhyme, yet he greatly polished the measures in which he wrote, and is supposed to have been the first who employed the decasyllabic metre, or what has been called our heroic verse. He is recognized by subsequent poets, who ought to be the best judges, as the reformer of the language and their instructor in the tuneful art. Gavin Douglas calls him "Venerable Chaucer, principal poet, but peer," and Spenser, looking back through two centuries, regards him as the "well of English undefiled." We give the following from his famous Tales as a specimen:—

The Good Parson.

A true good man there was there of religion,
Pious and poor—the parson of a town.
But rich he was in holy thought and work;
And thereto a right learned man; a clerk
That Christ's pure gospel would sincerely preach,
And his parishioners devoutly teach.
Benign he was, and wondrous diligent,
And in adversity full patient,
As proven oft; to all who lack'd a friend.
Loth for his tithes to ban or to contend,
At every need much rather was he found
Unto his poor parishioners around
Of his own substance and his dues to give:
Content on little, for himself, to live.

Wide was his cure; the houses far asunder,
Yet never failed he, or for rain or thunder,
Whenever sickness or mischance might call,
The most remote to visit, great or small,
And, staff in hand, on foot, the storm to brave.
This noble ensample to his flock he gave,
That first he wrought, afterward he taught.
The word of life he from the gospel caught;
And well this comment added he thereto.
If that gold rusteth, what should iron do?
And if the priest be foul on whom we trust,
What wonder if the unletter'd layman lust?
And shame it were in him the flock should keep,
To see a sullied shepherd, and clean sheep.
For sure a priest the sample ought to give
By his own cleanness how his sheep should live.

He never set his benefice to hire,
Leaving his flock acomber'd in the mire,
And ran to London coggng at St Poul's,
To seek himself a chaunterie for souls,
Or with a brotherhood to be enroll'd;
But dwelt at home, and guarded well his fold,
So that it should not by the wolf miscarry.
He was a shepherd, and no mercenary.

The holy in himself, and virtuous,
He still to sinful men was mild and piteous:
Not of reproach imperious or malign;
But in his teaching soothing and benign.
To draw them on to heaven, by reason fair
And good example, was his daily care.
But were there one perverse and obstinate,
Were he of lofty or of low estate,
Him would he sharply with reproof astound.
A better priest is no where to be found.

He waited not on pomp or reverence,
Nor made himself a spiced conscience.
The lore of Christ and his apostles twelve
He taught: but, first, he followed it himself.

The latter part of the fourteenth century is memorable for what may be considered the birth of

Scottish poetry, and Chaucer had no unworthy contemporary and rival in JOHN BARBOUR, Archdeacon of Aberdeen, the language of whose work, The Bruce, is as intelligible as that of Chaucer. Although Pinkerton's edition is now before us and the following passage has often been quoted, yet it is so characteristic of Barbour's poetry, and the sentiments so honourable to the poet, that we cannot supersede it by another quotation:—

A ! fredome is a nobill thing !
 Fredome mayse man to haiff liking ;
 Fredome all solace to man giffis :
 He levys at ese that frely levys !
 A noble hart may haiff nane ese,
 Na ellys nocht that may him plese,
 Gyff fredome faillyhe : for fre liking
 Is pharnyt our all othir thing
 Na he, that ay hase levyt fire,
 May nocht knaw weil the propyrtie
 The angry, na the wreycht dome,
 That is cowplyt to foule thyrldome.
 Bot gyff he had assayit it,
 Than all perquer he suld it wyt ;
 And suld think freedome mar to pryse
 Than all the gold in warld that is.

And thryldom is weill wer than deid,
 For quhill a thryll his lyff may leid,
 It mervys him, body and banyes,
 And dede anoyis him bot anys ;
 Schorty to say is nane can tell
 The halle condition of a thryll !

That we may afford a specimen of the prose of the age of which we are treating, we fondly turn to the oldest translation of the New Testament, by John Wiclif, "the morning star of the Reformation," who died about the age of sixty, in 1384. The edition from which we quote is that of Baber, 1810.

1 CORINTHIANS, CH. XIII.

If I speke with tungis of men and of angels and I haue not charite, I am maad as bras sownynge, or a cymbal tynklynge. and if I haue profecie and knowe alle mysteries and al kynnyng, and if I haue al feith, so that I moue hillis fro her place, and I haue not charite I am nought. and if I departe alle my goodis into the metis of pore men, and if I bitake my bodi so that I brenne and if I haue not charite it profitith to me no thing. charite is pacient, it is benygne. charite envyyeth not, it doith not wickidli, it is not blowun, it is not o'neitos, it sekith not tho thingis that ben hise cwe. it is not stired to wrath, it thenkith not yuel, it ioieth not on wickidnesse, but it ioieth togidre to treuth, it suffrih alle thingis, it bileueth alle thingis, it hopith alle thingis, it susteyneth alle thingis. charite alith neuere down. wethir profecies schulen be voidid, eithir langagis schulen ceese, eithir science schal be distried. for aparti we knowen, and aparti we profecien, but whanne that schal come that is parlyt, that thing that is of parti schal be auoidid. whanne I was a litil child I spak as a litil child, I undirstood as a litil child, I thoughte as a litil child ; but whanne I was made a man I voidide tho thingis that weren of a litil child. and we seen now bi a morour in derknesse, but thanne face to face. now I knowe of parti, but thanne I schal knowe as I am knowun. and now dwellen feith, hope and charite theses three, but the moost of theses is charite.

The earliest successor of Barbour was ANDREW WYNTOWN, a Prior of the monastery of St. Serf's Inch in Lochleven. His Orrygnale Cronykil of Scotland appears to have been finished in the beginning of the fifteenth century. It is written in the same measure with The Bruce, but we miss the sustained dignity and poetic warmth of the Arch-deacon in the Prior. His work, however, is clear, though quaint in style, and is valuable in an historical point of view ; of the nine books, of which the work consists, only the last four are devoted to Scottish history. These, with valuable notes, were admirably edited by David Macpherson and published in 1795, from which edition we make the following extract, not only as furnishing a specimen of Wynthown's style, but as embodying the oldest Scottish song now known to exist. The Chronicler thus describes the character of Alexander III. :—

Scotland menyd hym than ful sare :
 For wndyr hym all his Legis ware
 In Honour, Qwyete, and in Pes ;
 Forthi cald PESSYBIL KING he wes,
 He honoryd God and Haly Kyrk ;
 And medful dedis he oysyd to wyrk.
 Til all Prestis he dyd reverens,
 And sawfyd thare Statys wyth diligens.
 He was stedfast in Crystyn Fay ;
 Belyggows men he honoryde ay ;
 He luwyd men, that war wertuous ;
 He lathyd and chastyd al vytuous
 Be Justis he gave and Eglyte
 Til ilke man, that his suld be.
 That, he mycht nought til Wertu drawe,
 He held ay wndyr dowd and awe.
 He gert chasty mysdoaris
 As Lauch wald be thare manerys.
 The Lauch he gert he kepyd welle
 In all hys Kynryk ilka dele.
 He led his lyf in Honeste,
 Devotyoun, and Chastyte.
 Til Lordis, Knychtis, and Sqwyeris,
 That ware plesand of maneris,
 He was lele, iuwand and libérale,
 And all wertuous in Govenale.
 He wes gret of Almows Dede,
 Til all, that he could wyt, had nede.

This Sang wes made of hym for-thi.

"Quhen Alysandyr oure Kyng was dede,
 That Scotland led in Luwe and Le,
 Away wes Sons of Ale and Brede,
 Of Wyne and Wax, of Gamyn and Gle :

"Oure Gold wes changyd in-to Lede.
 Cryst, borne in-to Virgynyte,
 Succour Scotland, and remede,
 That stad is in perplexyte."

But of all the poets of the beginning of the fifteenth century the palm must undoubtedly be awarded to King James I. of Scotland, and, as he was kept a prisoner and educated in England, The King's Quair may be regarded as still furnishing an illustration of the state of the language at that period. Looking in the morning through the grating of his prison, he sees a lady in the adjacent garden, and he thus describes the scene and his emotions :—

— Kest I down mine eye again,
 Where as I saw, walking under the Toure,
 Full secretly, new comen hir to plain,
 The fairest or the freschest young flour
 That ever I saw, methought, before that hour,
 For which sudden abate, anon astert,
 The blood of all my body to my hert.

And though I stood abasit tho a lyte
 No wonder was ; for why ? my wittis all
 Were so o'ercome with plesance and delyght,
 Only through letting of my eye fall,
 That suddenly my hert became hir thrall,
 For ever of free will—for of menace
 There was no takyn in her suete face.

And in my head I drew right hastily,
 And eft sones I leant it out again,
 And saw her walk, that very womanly,
 With no wight mo', but only women twain.
 Then gan I study in myself, and sayne :
 ' Ah, sweet ! are ye a worldly creature,
 Or heavenly thing in likeness of nature ?

' Or are ye god Cupidis own princess,
 And comyn are to loose me out of band ?

Or are ye very Nature the goddess,
That have depaynted with your heavenly hand,
This garden full of flowers as they stand?
What sall I think, alas! what reverence
Sall I mester unto your excellence?

'If ye a goddess be, and that ye like
To do me pain, I may it not asert;
If ye be worldly wight, that doth me sike,
Why list God make you so, my dearest hart,
To do a sely prisoner this smert,
That lufis you all, and wote of nought but wo?
And therefore merci, sweet! sine it is so.' . .

Of hir array the form if I sall write,
Toward her golden hair and rich atire,
In fretwise couchit with perlis white
And great balas lemyng as the fire,
With mony ane emeryng and fair saphire;
And on her head a chaplet fresch of hue,
Of plumis parted red, and white, and blue.

Full of quaking spangis bright as gold,
Forged of shape like to the amoretis,
So new, so fresch, so pleasant to behold,
The plumis eke like to the flower jonetis,
And other of shape, like to the flower jonetis;
And above all this, there was, well I wot,
Beautee enough to make a world to dote.

About hir neck, white as the fire amaille,
A goodly chain of small orfery, . .
Whereby there hung a ruby, without faile,
Like to ane heart shapen verily,
That as a speck of low, so wantonly
Seemed birning upon her white throte,
Now gif there was good party, God it wot.

And for to walk that fresh May's morowe,
Ane hook she had upon her tisse white,
That goodlier had not been sene to-forowe,
As I suppose; and girt she was alite,
Thus halving loose for haste, to such delight
It was to see her youth in goodlihed.
That for rudenes to speak thereof I drede—

In her was youth, beautee, with humble apert,
Bountee, riches, and womanly faiture,
God better wote than my pen can report:
Wisdom, largesse, estate, and cunning sure,
In every point so guided her mesure,
In word, in dede, in schap, in countenance,
That nature might no more hir child avance!

A new day may be said to dawn with the beginning of the sixteenth century; for Warton says that HAWES's Pastime of Pleasure is almost the only effort of imagination which had appeared in our poetry since the days of Chaucer. Chambers says "it is full of thought, of ingenious analogy, and occasionally of striking allegory," and gives the following stanzas, stripped of the antiquated spelling:—

The Temple of Mars.

Beside this tower of old foundation,
There was a temple strongly edified,
To the high honour and reputation
Of the mighty Mars it was so fortified;
And for to know what it signified
I entered in, and saw of gold so pure
Of worthy Mars, the marvellous picture.

There was depainted all about the wall
The great destruction of the siege of Troy,
And the noble acts to reign memorial
Of the worthy Hector that was all their joy,
His dolorous death was hard to oocyte:
And so when Hector was cast all down,
The hardy Troilus was most high of renown.

And as I cast my sight so aside,
Beholding Mars how wonderfully he stood

On a wheel top, with a lady of pride,
Haunced about, I thought nothing but good
But that she had two faces in one hood;
Yet I knelt down, and made my orison
To doughty Mars with great devotion.

Saying: 'O Mars! O god of the war!
The gentle load-star of an hardy heart,
Distil adown thy grace from so far,
To cause all fear from me to start,
That in the field I may right well subvert
The hideous monsters, and win the victory
Of the sturdy giants with famous chivalry.

'O prince of honour and of worthy fame!
O noble knights of old antiquity!
O redoubted courage, the causer of their name,
Whose worthy acts Fame caused to be
In books written, as ye well may see—
So give me grace right well to recure
The power of fame that shall so long endure.'

Among the prose writers of this period, we may take note of ROBERT FABIAN, who was sheriff of London, and died in 1512. The following account of the deposition of King Vortigern, is taken from his Concordance of Stories:—

Of this holy man, St. Germain, Vincent Historial saith, that upon an evening when the weather was passing cold, and the snow fell very fast, he axed lodging of the king of Britain, for him and his companions, which was denied. Then he, after sitting under a bush in the field, the king's herdman passed by, and seeing this bishop with his company sitting in the weather, desired him to his house to take there such poor lodging as he had. Whereof the bishop being glad and fain, yode unto the house of the said herdman, the which received him with glad cheer. And for him and his company, willed his wife to kill his only calf, and to dress it for his guest's supper; the which was also done. When the holy man had supped, he called to him his hostess, willing and desiring her that she should diligently gather together all the bones of the dead calf; and them so gathered, to wrap together within the skin of the said calf. And then it lay in the stall before the rack near unto the dame. Which done according to the commandment of the holy man, shortly after the calf was restored to life; and forthwith at hay with the dame at the rack. At which marvel all the house was greatly astonished, and yielded thanking unto Almighty God and to that holy bishop.

Upon the morrow, this holy bishop took with him the herdman, and yode unto the presence of the king, and axed of him in sharp wise, why that overnight he had denied to him lodging. Wherewith the king was so abashed, that he had no power to give unto the holy man answer. Then St. Germain said to him: 'I charge thee, in the name of the Lord God, that thou and thine depart from this palace, and resign it and the rule of thy land to him that is more worthy this room than thou art.' The which all thing by power divine was observed and done; and the said herdman, by the holy bishop's authority, was set into the same dignity; of whom after descended all the kings of Britain.

Tracing the progress of our language to what has been termed the Elizabethan age (though the literature of the period so denominated, belongs not merely to the sixteenth, but also to the seventeenth century) we then observe a variety of influences, such as the study of classical learning, the invention of printing, the substitution of the philosophy of Plato for that of Aristotle, and the freedom of religious discussion, operating powerfully in expanding the intellect of the nations of Europe. To these general considerations, which could not fail to operate in England, must be added the encouragement which Elizabeth, herself possessed of no mean literary acquirements, offered to learning, and the impulse given to the national mind by the circulation of the Scriptures in the language of her subjects.

THOMAS SACKVILLE, Earl of Dorset, was the author of the Mirror for Magistrates, an extract from which may properly be introduced before we take leave of our reader on the introduction of Spenser.

And next in order sad, Old Age we found ;
His beard all hoar, his eyes hollow and blind ;
With drooping cheek still poring on the ground,
As on the place where nature him assigned
To rest, when the sisters had untwined
His vital thread, and ended with their knife
The fleeting course to fast declining life :

There heard we him with broke and hollow plaint
Rue with himself his end approaching fast,
And all for nought his wretched mind torment
With sweet remembrance of his pleasures past,
And fresh delights of lusty youth forewaste ;
Recounting which, how would he sob and shriek,
And to be young again of Jove beseeke !

But, an the cruel fates so fixed be
That time forepast cannot return again,
This one request of Jove yet prayed he—
That, in such weathered plight, and wretched pain,
As old, accompanied with her loathsome train,
Had brought on him, all were it wo and grief
He might a while yet linger forth his life,

And not so soon descend into the pit ;
Where Death, when he the mortal corpse hath slain,
With reckless hand in grave doth cover it :
Thereafter never to enjoy again
The gladsome light, but, in the ground ylain,
In depth of darkness waste and wear to nought,
As he had ne'r into the world been brought :

But who had seen him sobbing how he stood
Unto himself, and how he would bemoan
His youth forepast—as though it wrought him good
To talk of youth, all were his youth foregone—
He would have mused, and marvelled much whereon
This wretched Age should life desire so vain,
And knows full well life doth but length his pain :

Crook-backed he was, tooth-shaken, and blear-eyed ;
Went on three feet, and sometime crept on four ;
With old lame bones, that rattled by his side ;
His scalp all piled, and he with eld forelore,
His weathered fist still knocking at death's door
Fumbling, and driveling, as he draws his breath ;
For brief, the shape and messenger of death.

When we name SPENSER, we feel as if we had arrived among our modern poets. The date, 1553, is given as that of the year of his birth, and he is supposed to have come before the world as a poet so early as 1569. His great work is the Faery Queens, in which, under the direction of Gloriana, a number of personages, representing so many virtues, set forth to vanquish the vices opposed to their nature. But we feel little interest either in the personages or their adventures ; the mind is absorbed in the beauty of the poetry in which these are described ; for it is the imagination of the poet in conceiving, and his fancy in adorning these conceptions, together with the exuberance, fluency, grace, and beauty of the language, that delight the reader ; whilst a spirit of nobleness, gentleness, love, and chivalry pervades the whole. But we must deny ourselves the pleasure of expatiating on the exquisite productions of Spenser, and permit him briefly to speak for himself, merely stripping his words of a few superfluous letters.

Una and the Redcross Knight.

A gentle knight was pricking on the plain,
Yclad in mighty arms and silver shield,

Wherein old dints of deep wounds did remain,
The cruel marks of many a bloody field ;
Yet arms till that time did he never wield :
His angry steed did chide his foaming bit,
As much disdain to the curb to yield :
Full jolly knight he seemed, and fair did sit,
As one for knightly jousts and fierce encounters fit.

And on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge he wore,
And dead—as living—ever him adored :
Upon his shield the like was also scored,
For sovereign hope, which in his help he had ;
Right faithful true he was in deed and word ;
But of his cheer did seem too solemn sad :
Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.

Upon a great adventure he was bound,
That greatest Gloriana to him gave—
That greatest glorious queen of fairy land—
To win him worship, and her grace to have,
Which of all earthly things he most did crave ;
And ever as he rode his heart did yearn
To prove his puissance in battle brave
Upon his foe, and his new force to learn ;
Upon his foe, a dragon horrible and stern.

A lovely lady rode him fair beside,
Upon a lowly ass more white than snow ;
Yet she much whiter, but the same did hide
Under a veil that wimpled was full low,
And over all a black stole she did throw,
As one that inly mourned : so was she sad,
And heavy sat upon her palfrey slow ;
Seemed in heart some hidden care she had,
And by her in a line a milk-white lamb she led.

So pure and innocent, as that same lamb,
She was in life and every virtuous lore,
And by descent from royal lineage came
Of ancient kings and queens, that had of yore
Their sceptres stretcht from east to western shore,
And all the world in their subjection held ;
Till that infernal fiend with foul uproar
Forewasted all their land and them expelled ;
Whom to avenge, she had this knight from far compelled.

Behind her far away a dwarf did lag,
That lazy seemed in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his back. Thus as they past
The day with clouds was sudden overcast,
And angry Jove an hideous storm of rain
Did pour into his leman's lap so fast,
That every wight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

Enforced to seek some covert nigh at hand,
A shady grove not far away they spied,
That promised aid the tempest to withstand ;
Whose lofty trees, yclad with summer's pride,
Did spread so broad, that heaven's light did hide,
Nor pierceable with power of any star :
And all within were paths and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far :
Fair harbour, that them seems ; so in they entered are.

* * Our limited space has obliged us to present a very imperfect view of an interesting subject, even within the range which we had prescribed to ourselves ; but those who may be incited by these remarks still farther to prosecute this study, will find ample materials in the works of Ellis, Chambers, Latham, Craik, Spalding, and other cultivators of the same field.

A CATALOGUE OF ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.

THE following is a Catalogue of English Dictionaries, properly so called; for we have purposely omitted some of the most ancient Dictionaries published in England, such as the Dictionarium of Sir Thomas Elyot, published in 1538, because it was Latin and English; neither have we admitted into this brief list Dictionaries of Theology, Law, Medicine, Chemistry, Arts and Sciences, &c.

"There are many points," says Worcester, "relating to English lexicography that are not easily ascertained. Many of the Dictionaries have had their titles changed from those which were given them in the first edition; many of them have been much altered by the labour of subsequent editors; with respect to some, it is not easy to ascertain the date of the first edition; and some have undoubtedly been published which have passed into oblivion, and are now entirely unknown."
